Tokyo, Oct. 7 (U.P.)—Prime Minister Ichiro Hatoyama left for Moscow today to try to end the 11-year-old state of war between Japan and Russia and restore normal diplomatic relations.

Cheerful and optimistic, the ailing 73-year-old prime minister told a crowd at Tokyo's international airport: "I will return after having successfully concluded my mission."

Earlier Hatoyama conferred with Allen W. Dulles, chief of the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency, who flew here yesterday on a two-month global tour. Details of their talk were not disclosed.

Several thousand Japanese turned out to see Hatoyama off. Police, fearful of threats by ultra-nationalists, kept the crowd well away from the official party. There were no incidents.

Yesterday, police arrested a 26-year-old nationalist who said he intended to kill Hatoyama.
